Introducing the new dance studios at Wilson Hall

This project consisted of centralizing the Dance Program which was located within multiple building locations for the College of Performing Arts. The new addition centralizes the dance program in the College of Performing Arts' main academic building for the first time in the program's 53-year history. From its inception, Rowan hosted its dance students and faculty in Memorial Hall, across campus in a renovated dining hall at then-Glassboro State College.

The 7,500 square-foot addition features two dance studios, faculty offices and student spaces, allowing the dance program to continue its growth and fulfill accreditation standards from the National Association of Schools of Dance. The project was forged through the tireless efforts of Rowan's facilities team, Ogren Construction and design partner FIFTEEN Architecture.

Following the opening ceremony, Rowan Dance students performed their first steps in the new studios. Both students and several of their classmates looked up in awe at the two-story ceilings and shiny new floors, eager to wear them in with their dancing shoes.

Rowan's Dance program serves more than 300 students each semester and boasts more than 250 alumni.
