Think. Thrive. Share

Honors students do much more than work hard in their classes, labs, or studios. They are lively, engaged citizen-scholars, who range from artists to engineers and educators, as well as from philosophers to business people and graphic designers.

Honors has allowed me to become a part of a community that values education and involvement as much as I do. The honors program has led me to meet many people outside of my major, and it has helped me to create great friendships. ~English and Education dual majors

Honors inspires me to be a well-rounded individual and to succeed in all aspects of life, from the classroom to the community ~Advertising major

Honors allows me to do things my major doesn't. In what other world does a Biochemistry major get to take a class on Locations and Dislocations through German narratives taught by the head of the Writing Arts department? I also love that Honors allows me to do delve deeper into things that my major does; I never thought I could earn credit hours for the privilege of getting to intern working in a chemistry research lab! ~Biochemistry major

EVERY TUESDAY 12:30-2:00PM
HONORS SEMINAR ROOM, WHITNEY SE-201

“Let’s Talk” is a service that provides easy access to informal, confidential consultations with CPS counselors. There is no appointment or fee necessary. Students are seen on a first-come, first-served basis. There may be a wait if the counselor is currently meeting with a student, but every effort will be made to meet with all students who wish to talk that day. All sites are open to all students.

Unwind and have fun for a good cause! Come make activity books for sick kids at our Honors “do good and de-stress” event. Supplies will be provided. This event can count toward either service or participation, whichever you need.

For more information contact: Kendra Harris or Sydney Gould, MOS Service & Events Coordinator.
Honors students are committed to service, volunteering at least 14 hours each semester.

They share their knowledge and creativity with one another.

They are campus leaders involved in student groups and activities throughout the University.
