More About Kim

Kim Johnston has been a proud member of the Rowan University community since 2015 and currently serves as a Proposal Specialist in the Division of University Research. In this role, she leads proposal development, budget creation, and submission for faculty across the university, with a continued focus on supporting the Henry M. Rowan College of Engineering.

As a first-generation college student, Kim earned her Bachelor of Arts in Communication Studies from Rowan and is currently pursuing her MBA to further strengthen her leadership and strategic skillset. She also holds the Certified Pre-Award Research Administrator (CPRA) credential.

Beyond her professional role, Kim is passionate about creating a more supportive and inclusive campus environment. She led an initiative to expand lactation spaces across campus, increasing access for nursing mothers. As a member of the Women's Alliance Network Board, she continues to advocate for and empower women across the Rowan community.

At home, Kim balances her career with a busy household of four children and two dogs. She enjoys spending her "free time" cheering on her daughters at dance and cheer events.
